

Canadians thus followed the course which became so popular in wartime, of having away a part of their earnings for future use or security against future need. The proportion of earners would be much greater of course, many of the buyers being heads of families.

Of this great number 623,840 bought their bonds on the payroll savings plan, their employers agreeing to deduct a part of the price each pay day. The others, approximately half the total, paid cash over the counter at the time of purchase or bought on the installment plan. This shows that people of all classes were among the buyers, and the distribution of the bonds remarkably general.

Another issue of Savings Bonds will be offered for sale next month. As the first issue, the new bonds will be purchasable by payroll deductions arrangements, for cash, or on installment terms. The rate of interest will be the same, 2 1/2 per cent. The bonds may be cashed at any time at any bank, for full value plus interest up to date. They will be registered in the buyer's name, thus protecting him against loss or theft. They will mature in ten years.

The reception accorded the sale of the first issue of Savings Bonds shows that Canadians very generally are maintaining the habit of thrift which they developed and demonstrated signally when they bought billions of war bonds. That the new issue will be welcomed, widely and heartily, is to be inferred. It is, in fact, largely to meet a known public demand for such an opportunity to lay away surplus earnings that the second series is to be placed on the market.

The greater the number who buy, the larger will be the proportion of our people who will have a stake against future requirements and some stored up capital for future use. And the greater the number who have such security and stored up capital, the more solidly based will be the national economy.

Treaty With Soviet

By ELMORE PHILPOTT

The statement made the other day by L. B. Pearson, Deputy Minister of External Affairs in Canada, is one of the most important of these times.

Obviously it is addressed to a society which tries to promote the friendship between Canada and Russia. Actually it is a pointed hint to the Soviet Union that Canada is not only willing to sign a treaty with Russia, but is also willing to make the Arctic border between the two countries as friendly a border as can be made between Canada and the United States.

PHILPOTT is quite right in saying that there would be no point in trying to negotiate the treaty with the Soviet Union the same kind of military treaty which exists between the Soviet Union and the United States. Everybody who knows the Arctic border knows that the treaty is, in fact, not a complete dead letter, then an arrangement to put in a state of suspended animation.

But Canada's new career diplomat lets the world know that Canada would place the Arctic border in the same category as the common civilian border which has been increasing in years to come.

Food the World's Problem

While it was obvious to many that the urgent need of the post-war world would be a greater supply of food, the policy of every nation was turned towards the encouragement of industrial production.

This movement was based on the theory that higher standards of living could only be induced by higher industrialization of farms. This theory, of course, is thoroughly sound over a long period. It is, indeed, exactly how modern industrial society was created in the first place.

But the transition period is dangerously depressing to agricultural production and the result today is a critical shortage of food in world markets. Food, today, is the world's most pressing problem.

Even in Russia, where the change has been under way for a long time, with all the power of a totalitarian state behind it, food production lags dangerously behind all other developments.

An adequate diet is estimated to require the efficient cropping of 2 1/2 acres per person. Available arable land, only to be increased at great cost, is shared by optimists at four billion acres and by other authorities at little more than two and a half billion acres—to feed a world population of two and a quarter billion people.

Premier Ramdollar told the people of France the other day that the grain crop would not be sufficient to meet the nation's needs and that there was "no possibility" of getting more cereals abroad than had been already arranged for. Wherefore the bread ration was being cut from nine ounces per week to seven ounces. The position of France differs only in degree from that of other countries which are not numbered among the great exporters of food.

Obviously present food production under present methods is not enough.

The Wooden Coach Menace

Investigation will in due time disclose how the railway wreck east of Winnipeg came about, and what, if any, operational changes are required to make such occurrences less liable in future. But the early despatches show one fact which has attracted much attention. The special train carrying returning vacationists was made up in part of wood-burnt coaches. These burst into flames immediately—as usually happens in such circumstances.

This no doubt accounts in measure for the heavy loss of life and the large number of persons injured. The moral is not new. The wooden railway car is a relic which should disappear with no avoidable loss of time. When a crash happens it happens frequently as crushed, while steel-burnt coaches protect their occupants. If fire breaks out the wooden coaches become man-traps. They should be eliminated, and replaced with steel cars as speedily as possible.

Up to the U.N.O.

Arabs and Jews in Palestine are agreed on one point, only. They join in proclaiming that Britain should be "relieved" of its mandated obligations forthwith.

Congratulations to Britain are in order. Its career as custodian of that troubled zone has brought neither glory nor profit, and promises neither. The United Nations can find no satisfaction in having to inherit the thicket and seemingly hopeless task of reconciling the irreconcilable factions.

The organization was in no hurry to take on this job, avoided that in fact as long as it could do so with any regard to its Charter responsibilities. Not until it was clear it would accept the duty, and not obviously so only because of future anti-stepping is hardly possible.

Months ago London all but invited the UNO to take over. In the light of subsequent events and present reactions Britain's contemporaries can no longer sit on the sidelines and ignore responsibilities which belong to them as much as to the luckless holder of the obsolete mandate.

As to the outlook under UNO control, the Arabs say openly that they will fight either scheme proposed by the advisory commission. They speak with the pledged backing of the Arab nations and the sympathy of the Muslim world.

Britain will be well rid of the problem. It is to be hoped the Security Council will be able to muster the international influence and pressure to deal with the situation in a constructive way. The deadlock has lasted too long.

Along the Fairways

with Bert Greer

When members of the Edmonton Golf and Country Club turn in scores around 80 they shouldn't be too discouraged—it's a tough course.

At least that's the consolation offered by Stan Leonard, popular Vancouver Marine Drive professional who won the open in a previous Labor Day weekend.

Even after Stan had chalked up a seven-under-par 277 to end the tourney, he was still firmly of the opinion that the course was no "pushover" for anyone.

He probably had in mind the 13th and 16th holes, two of the most dangerous on the layout. He blew a chance to set a new course record on the 13th when he pulled his tee shot and went down heavily wooded blind. After blasting three shots he managed to shift the ball into a bunker and then needed three more to hole it. He was four under before that piece of bad luck.

The last one he landed at least one thing—beside having the shot in his bag, he also has a perfect golfing temperament. After a stroke of misfortune like that the majority of players, including the top scorers, would have blown up like a tire. But not Leonard.

Just lucked down a little harder and blasted out three birdies in the next four holes. He was under par 68. A par on the 84, Jack McKinnon, professional at the Capilano course in Vancouver, believes the game is losing a lot of its luster, and he feels rather completely at sea.

Says Jack: "You can take a big boy with strong hands and a keen pair of eyes and make him into a golfer in three days. After he has acquired a grounded swing, he is liable to beat anyone—provided he has something between his ears. But a golfer or a slite, he would be completely at sea."

Jack has a lot of respect for Walter Hagen's opinion that Hagen was a master shotmaker. He could practically make the ball talk," he said.

Diane Sutherland, who left his post as professional of the Edmonton Country Club to become president of the Vancouver Point Grey course nearly 20 years ago, was both surprised and pleased when the Country Club of 20 years ago was at a loss to find words to emphasize the change since the 1940s.

Firemen Clinch
Semi-Final Berth

The Fire Department kept riding right along at Westwood last night. They eliminated Legion 18 from the playoffs with a 6-3 victory to clinch their berth of three in straight games.

The Premier closed out four hits, but Legion must have helped them with a 5-4 lead in the first frame. With a single tally in the second inning and two more in the sixth, they matched Legion's lead in the fifth and singleton in the sixth.

Taylor and Pearson taught with Harvard tonight at 7 p.m. in the West Knapway field.

Airplane Plays Ever-Increasing Role in Public Service

The airplane is increasing its role in public service. This was demonstrated on the holiday when a Canadian Pacific Air Lines plane brought Robert Thompson of St. John's, Nfld., to the city for hospital treatment. Mr. Thompson is shown above being removed from the plane to an ambulance for treatment at the hospital. Latest reports are that as a result of the quick trip, his condition was much improved.

The expert player watches the drop of every card, and thus is able to make deductions that give him the maximum number of tricks on a hand. For that reason the one-handed play is today's hand might receive a good player. Of course an afternoon bridge party, accompanied by conversation about new hats and new boy friends, no longer pays much attention to the cards played. But let us assume that you are playing serious bridge, and today's hand comes up.

and declarer leads a small club from dummy. East wins the trick and South finessees the queen. Now if West plays the four of clubs, declarer very likely will count him for three clubs in the tenace; if West plays the eight on the first club trick, a good player will reason that he must have the ten and eight. Therefore, he will think that his correct play is to lead the jack of clubs, which will result in a dummy, and if East covers, the ten will fall. If East fails to cover, the ten will be picked up on the next round. But of course West's false-card defeats declarer's well-laid plans.

Do not get into the habit of playing carelessly. If you have a chance to deceive your opponent, and it will not hurt your partner, employ a false-card play of this type, especially when playing against an expert.

Cover Girl

Other EATON Councillors across Canada
model back-to-school Fall fashions!

Looking just like a professional model up top on the cover is Jane Emery . . . tall, blonde Eaton Junior Councillor from Westglen High School, Edmonton, Alberta . . . fourth-in-a-row annual Cover Girl chosen from Eaton councils across Canada. Judges Barbara Ann Scott, artist R. York-Wilson, and photographer Paul Rockett thought her charm, sparkle, and typical Canadian teen-ness made her a cover "natural" . . . we, naturally, think so too.

And, speaking of charming, typical teens . . . look at these other photos from the issue! Still more Eaton councillors, (with Eaton's Jr. Execs.), from Montreal to Calgary . . . modelling junior casuals and datewear, all (like Jane's tartan suit) from Eaton's!
